Show Me the Money LEED Points and Financial Incentives

Evening Program & Panel Discussion

Jan. 25, 2010 – LI Children’s Museum, Garden City

Hundreds of thousands of dollars in direct utility savings, incentives, rebates and tax benefits are often overlooked by the design team costing the owner significant money due to a lack of project collaboration. This breakdown can cause a mismatch of mechanical equipment, unexpected inefficiencies that are easily avoidable and missed opportunities to recoup money that's sitting on the table yet rarely tapped.

Panelists will discuss the potential savings owners and developers can realize on new construction and existing buildings through integrated design, direct LIPA/National Grid Incentives, as well as tax savings opportunities. We will show where the money is hiding to help make green building projects commonplace.

Learning Objectives

- How early coordination with LEED APs, public utility, design team and MEP’s can uncover energy efficiencies
- Discussion of utility incentives, tax savings and how integrated design leads to lower operating expenses
- How integrated design leads to cost savings on overall operations of building mechanicals after construction
- Learn Firm Rate vs. non-firm rate
- Review of EPA Act Opportunity – Extension through 2013
- Lighting and Lighting Controls, Qualifying HVAC technologies and tax benefits
- Grants in lieu of tax credits and for specified energy properties
